Pinkert-Lieb has spent the last 30 years representing professional women and understands the hurdles that they often face in the legal system. "One of the most common obstacles faced by professional women during a divorce is the challenge to their role as the primary caretaker of their children," she says. "These women often find themselves having to defend their choices, availability, and ability to provide a consistent and stable environment for their children." Pinkert-Lieb is committed to dismantling the biases that exist against women who have elected, by necessity or otherwise, to have a career outside of the home.
